

How Does Media and Big Tech Shape the New World Order?

Sixbert SANGWA • December 14, 2024

The influence of media and Big Tech in shaping modern society cannot be overstated. From newspapers and television to social media and search engines, these platforms determine much of what people know, think, and believe about the world around them. However, beneath the surface lies a troubling reality: major media and technology companies are not merely neutral distributors of information. Instead, their operations are deeply intertwined with secret societies, such as the Illuminati, and globalist agendas that aim to create a New World Order—a centralized system of control that undermines truth and individual freedom.

The role of these entities in suppressing true information while promoting manipulated narratives is crucial to understand, especially in the light of biblical warnings about deception in the last days. Jesus Himself cautioned, "Watch out that no one deceives you. For many will come in my name, claiming, 'I am the Messiah,' and will deceive many" (Matthew 24:4-5). This article will explore how media and Big Tech serve as tools for advancing this agenda, delving into their historical connections to secret societies, their methods of censorship and narrative control, and the spiritual implications of their actions.

Historical Connections: Media, Big Tech, and Secret Societies

Since the 1800s, secret societies have sought control over key societal institutions, including the media (Anderson, 2018). Historical records show that prominent families and organizations linked to the Illuminati methodically acquired newspapers, publishing houses, and later, broadcasting networks to shape public opinion. William Randolph Hearst, for example, built a media empire that profoundly influenced public perception during pivotal historical moments (Nasaw, 2013). In our time, tech giants like Google, Facebook, and Twitter have become the new gatekeepers of digital information (Flew and Martin, 2022).

The consolidation of media ownership reveals a stark concentration of power. A small group of corporations controls most media outlets worldwide, creating an echo chamber of carefully curated narratives (Noam, 2016). These corporations maintain strong ties to globalist think tanks like the Council on Foreign Relations and the World Economic Forum—organizations that advocate for centralized global governance (Quigley, 1966; Richardson, 2020). Such connections highlight media and technology's role in advancing a New World Order agenda.

By the 1950s, a new force emerged—more potent than America's deadliest weapons—mass deception through television. Today's global news flows primarily through two agencies: Reuters and The Associated Press. The Rothschild family's acquisition of Reuters in the 1800s, followed by Reuters' purchase of The Associated Press, created the world's largest centralized news service. In his revealing book "Who Owns the TV Networks?", Eustace Mullins demonstrates how the Rothschild, Rockefeller, and J.P. Morgan financial cartels control major TV networks, radio stations, newspapers, and publishing empires through their corporate conglomerates (Mullins, 1995).

These media conglomerates, backed by major financial institutions, include weapons manufacturers like General Electric and Westinghouse—companies that benefit from war promotion (Herman & Chomsky, 2002). The "Big 5" media empires—General Electric, Time Warner, Viacom, Disney, and News Corp—dominate the Internet, publishing, recording, and cable industries (Bagdikian, 2004). While media outlets have multiplied, critics note that their messaging remains remarkably uniform (McChesney, 2015).

Corporate sponsorship drives television programming, with sponsors naturally favoring content that aligns with their business interests (McChesney, 1999). While pressing issues like global hunger persist, media companies emphasize entertainment content, particularly sports, which critics say diverts attention from serious matters (Jhally, 2006). This concentrated media ownership raises legitimate concerns about these entities' power to shape public opinion and influence political discourse (Arsenault & Castells, 2008).

Suppression of Truth and Narrative Manipulation

One of the most insidious aspects of media and Big Tech's influence is their ability to suppress true information while amplifying false or manipulated narratives (Tucker et al., 2020). This is evident in their handling of critical topics such as politics, health, and religion. For example, during the COVID-19 pandemic, dissenting voices that questioned the origins of the virus, the efficacy of vaccines, or the legitimacy of lockdowns were systematically silenced (Flew and Iosifidis, 2020). Platforms like YouTube and Facebook removed content deemed "misinformation," even when it came from credible scientists and researchers (Vraga & Bode, 2021).

This suppression extends to issues of faith and morality (Campbell & Tsuria, 2022). Christian perspectives on topics like marriage, gender, and the sanctity of life are often labeled as "hate speech" and censored. The prophet Isaiah warned of such times, saying, "Woe to those who call evil good and good evil, who substitute darkness for light and light for darkness" (Isaiah 5:20). By controlling the narrative, media and Big Tech not only suppress the truth but also promote a worldview that aligns with globalist ideologies and undermines biblical values.

Echo Chambers and Filter Bubbles

Social media algorithms play a significant role in shaping public perception by creating echo chambers and filter bubbles. These algorithms are designed to show users content that aligns with their existing beliefs, reinforcing biases and limiting exposure to diverse viewpoints. However, the content promoted often reflects globalist ideologies, such as secularism, relativism, and the normalization of practices contrary to biblical teachings.

This phenomenon serves as a form of misdirection—a hallmark of spiritual deception. While people are distracted by trending topics or polarizing debates, hidden agendas advance behind the scenes. For instance, while society debates climate change policies, globalist organizations use these discussions to push for greater centralization of power under the guise of "sustainability." This aligns with the warning in 2 Thessalonians 2:9-10, which speaks of the coming of the lawless one with false signs and wonders that deceive those who reject the truth.

Misinformation and Disinformation

The rapid spread of misinformation and disinformation has been exacerbated by social media, but these terms are often weaponized to discredit inconvenient truths. Misinformation, defined as false or misleading information shared without intent to deceive, and disinformation, which is deliberately deceptive, are frequently conflated to dismiss narratives that challenge the globalist agenda. True information that exposes these agendas is often labeled as "conspiracy theory," a term popularized by the CIA in the 1960s to discredit critics of official narratives (Britanica, 2024).

This tactic creates an environment where truth becomes suppressed and lies are inaugurated as the new norm. The Bible speaks of such a time, saying, "For the time will come when people will not tolerate sound doctrine, but according to their own desires, will multiply teachers for themselves because they have an itch to hear what they want to hear" (2 Timothy 4:3). In this context, media and Big Tech become the "teachers" who dictate what is acceptable to believe and what must be rejected.

Spiritual Implications and the Call to Discernment

The manipulation of information by media and Big Tech is not merely a social or political issue; it is a spiritual battle. Ephesians reminds us, "For our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the cosmic powers of this darkness, against evil, spiritual forces in the heavens" (Ephesians 6:12). As Christians, we are called to discern the times and stand firm in the truth of God's Word. How should believers respond to these challenges? First, by seeking wisdom and understanding through prayer and Scripture. Proverbs declares, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; fools despise wisdom and discipline" (Proverbs 1:7). Second, by actively engaging in conversations that challenge false narratives, always speaking the truth in love (Ephesians 4:15). Lastly, by supporting alternative media and platforms that uphold biblical values and encourage open dialogue.

Conclusion and Reflection

The extensive influence of media conglomerates, technology giants, and social media platforms in shaping global narratives represents a critical challenge to truth and transparency. These entities, interconnected through the Illuminati network, work in concert to advance their New World Order agenda. As documented throughout this analysis, the concentration of media ownership and digital platform control among a select group of powerful corporations, their ties to globalist organizations, and their synchronized ability to manipulate information flow raise serious concerns about their role in preparing for the reign of the Antichrist.

In an era where Reuters and Associated Press dominate global news distribution, major social media platforms enforce ideological conformity, and the "Big 5" media empires control most of what we see and hear, we must be particularly vigilant. What's more concerning is how local and national media outlets frequently quote and reference these Illuminati-controlled sources, essentially becoming megaphones for their narratives and promoting their approved "expert" sources. Any information that challenges these approved narratives is systematically labeled as "misinformation," "disinformation," "malinformation," "hate speech," or "conspiracy theories" - terms weaponized by the United Nations and its affiliated organizations to discredit and suppress truth that threatens their control. This has led to a disturbing phenomenon where knowledge is now considered "official" or "factual" only if it aligns with narratives disseminated through these controlled channels. Academic institutions, scientific journals, and educational systems increasingly validate information based on its alignment with these approved sources, effectively making the Illuminati network the arbiter of what constitutes "truth" in our modern world.

These platforms, though seemingly competitive, operate in concert to shape public consciousness toward their shared agenda of global influence. As Jesus reminded us, "You will know the truth, and the truth will set you free" (John 8:32). As believers, we must expose deception, stand firm in our convictions, support voices that uphold biblical values, and share God's truth across all spheres of influence—particularly as these consolidated power structures echo biblical prophecies about the end times.
